The torta ahogada ("drowned sandwich," pictured) is Guadalajara's signature sandwich and most popular street food. The bread used, called birote, is native to the region and made to withstand the tender, Jalisco-style pork and spicy Yhualica pepper salsa that sits between it. Another must-try food native to the region is birria, a hearty meat stew. Don't miss Hueso, a local favorite best known for the thousands of white bones lining the interior of the restaurant. To the owners, a bone represents flavor. In the summer of 2018 from July 13-23, the city will celebrate its very first restaurant week, Semana del Restaurante.
